

Seniors say farewell to the halls of O-E.

The curtains close on another graduating class as the members of the Ovid-Elsie Class of 1970 mount the steps of the platform to receive their diplomas. The air is filled with mixed emotions but silence rides over all as memories crowd the brain.

Only four years ago, the Elsie Freshmen joined the Ovid to form what would be the first true OVID-ELSIE graduating class. Friendships were made and prejudices forgotten. We attended athletic events, dances, and parties. We were one; one until this night as we file out from the rows of seats into our own personal future.

We will journey on in life and form other groups, but never will there be the wholeness of a class, such as this, for this is the class of the future, the Class of '70.
