

Joining Forces

As Ovid and Elsie students began high school, they joined forces with each other. They were no longer Ovid Romans or Elsie Big Reds; they became the Ovid-Elsie Marauders.

When they became Marauders, they had new people to meet and many new things to discover. Together, they helped each other to adjust.

As athletes, O-E students were supportive of each other. "Coming into high school, we were two separate schools, but over the past four years our rivalry turned into friendship in most cases," commented senior Susan Bearup.

When asked her opinion on joining schools, Heather Ott stated, "Senior year has been my best year. As far as combining schools goes, I didn't really have a choice. I just had to get used to the way things were."

Kim Nash said, "I think it was better having combined schools because I met a lot of new and interesting people."

□Kathy Haley

SCOPING IT OUT? Seniors Ryan Lewis and Jason Berndt are busy dissecting a fetal pig during human physiology class. The pig was just one of the steps used to help students learn about humans.

