This year just as any year many students migrated south during spring break. The students have been making plans since December. Some chose the option to drive and their experiences will long be remembered. Going through unknown states and driving down endless highways gave it all the excitement which was hoped for. Most of the money for the trip was spent on gas. With food second on the list.

Others chose to reach farther into their piggy banks or beg their parents for a little extra money so they could fly. This was also a great experience. Meeting new people and getting an aerial view of the United States.

No matter how they got to their destination whether it be Florida, Texas, Arizona or the Bahamas the trips were an adventure.

Though most of their pockets came back empty they were all rich with the fond memories of the love they found and left, dark tans, and many stories to tell.

Below are some pictures that tell some of the stories of their adventures during Spring Break 1980.
