

AFTER GRADUATION

WHAT WILL THE FUTURE HOLD?

"I'm going to join the circus! They get to see the world and stuff," said Johnny.

"Well I'm going to be a policeman. I get to have a gun, and visit doughnut shops, and everything," said Tommy.

"Big deal, I'm going to be President of the United States so I can tell you and everybody else what to do," said Susie.

"You can't be President, you're a girl!" said Johnny.

"I can be anything I want to be when I grow up, so there!" yelled Susie.

Today reality plays a major part in career choice for seniors. Talent is certainly a criteria for the leaders of tomorrow. Satisfaction, and enjoyment are also important, since retirement is a long way off. Holding the most presidency is the amount of money that is involved.

"When thinking about the future I feel confident! I think I can set my goals, and attain them," said Steve Sjoberg.

College is in the plans of many seniors. "Whichever one wants me to run cross country for them is the college for me," said Luanne Hurst. Others are quite specific. "Hopefully I'll go to the Air Force in Colorado Springs," said Mike Martindale.

After college, many would like to go into their own field of expertise. "I'd like to be an automotive mechanic," said Kent Ley.

After settling into a profession, perhaps settling down, permanently, might cross seniors' minds. Marriage, and children may be the next step. "Marriage? I doubt it! But, then again you never know. Kids? Hummm, only two, and not until after I get married!" said Mike Bangs.

After altering childhood dreams, Johnny, Tommy, and Susie have decided on their future careers. "After graduation I'm going to become a Travel agent, so I can see the world," said John. "I'm going to become a policeman to fight for law, and justice," said Tom. "Now that we're seniors, I can see that the White House really needs me. They better keep the executive position warm for me," said Sue.

• Monica Robertson

Seniors Gina Fuentes, and Sue Walker look for information on their future careers with the microfiche. Gina wants to go into teaching, and Sue wishes to pursue a career in child development.

Kathryn O'Dell

Geraldine San Juan

Brenda Schafer

Dale Schafer

Randall Schmidt

Lisa Schmidtman

Steve Schnieder

Mark Scott

Heather Scranton