Teens Who Make A Difference

"Nothing the heart gives away is gone. It is kept in the hearts of others," began an article in People magazine, November 1988. The article was about the small town of Midland, Texas, that pulled together to save the life of 18-month old Jessica McClure who was trapped in a well.

It doesn't always take an entire town to make a difference in someone's life. All it takes is a considerate hand to help those who have special problems. Senior Jeff Tomlinson commented, "Helping disabled children learn how to ski made me realize how lucky I am. I feel fortunate to have the things

I do. It was a fun experience to help someone overcome their disability."

Often working with children can be rewarding. "Volunteering to work with kids is the best thing, I think. Just helping them and being around them makes me feel worthwhile," said Marla Wierman.

Volunteering can mean giving up a lot of free time, and receiving nothing for it. Nothing, except the satisfaction of helping someone overcome an obstacle.
