Choosing the college to go to after graduation could be one of the most important decisions of one's life. A good option that can help make the decision easier is college visitation. Students are allowed to take a field trip to the college for an entire school day, allowing them to become better acquainted with the school and its people.

"I visited Western Michigan University. I really liked the campus and the people seemed so caring," said senior Mary Martens.

"I went to Northern Michigan University. It was beautiful up there and the people were friendly. I also enjoyed the time off from school," said senior Mike Beebee.

For college bound seniors, college visitation seems a popular step towards making that big decision.

It is necessary to get a feel for the atmosphere at a college before enrolling," said Chris Raymond.

UCLA or MSU? Well...it's warm out in California but then I'll miss all my friends here. I probably can't get a scholarship except here in Michigan anyways.
