

LONG Distance

OUT-OF-STATE COLLEGES OFFER NEW EXPERIENCES

Attending out-of-state colleges can be an exciting experience. Many students enjoy the freedom that out-of-state schools provide. "I am ready to be on my own," said Senior Laura Ward, "You get a chance to meet new people." Laura plans to attend Eastern Kentucky University. "It is far enough away from home to be independent, but close enough to be able to come home," said Senior Kyle McNamara who is considering Georgetown University. Financial concerns often pose a problem for out-of-state students.

"All the schools I'm applying to are expensive because of the quality of education they offer," said Senior Shani Fletcher who plans to attend Wellesley College.

Future career choices keep some students close to home.

"I want to be a teacher and I feel Central Michigan University is the best education college," said Senior Terry Schwartzkopf.

Although out-of-state colleges can be more expensive and far away, many students enjoy the freedom that can come from colleges far from home.

Anne Hoft

"Out-of-state schools are better for people who wish to broaden their horizons beyond the confines of Michigan," said Senior Shani Fletcher. Photo by Fitch

"I've decided to go to Evangel College in Missouri because their Communications Department was the best I could find and it is a Christian college," said Senior Sara Beers.

Photo by Andrew Jenkins

Daisuke Kanazu
Amy Jo Kavo
Anthony Keim
Matthew Kemp

John Kissane
Ryan Kissane
Joshua Knight
Tracy Koenigsnecht