

As she talks to Mrs. Cornell in the Student Service Office, Senior Jennifer Schultz learns that for the mock interviews she must prepare a resume and dress in an appropriate manner. Over thirty area business people volunteered their time to interview these students.

photo by Laura Schafer

Experts Prepare GRADS

Practice interviews give seniors a special advantage for their future goals.

For some people, interviews can be nerve wracking.

"I was really nervous in the beginning of my (senior) interview, but after awhile I became more confident," said Senior Heidi Ramsay.

"I thought that getting all dressed up for the interview made it seem more realistic," said Senior Molly Harr.

But for some people getting dressed up wasn't all that great.

"I liked having the senior interview, but I didn't like dressing up because I felt uncomfortable," said Senior Tracie Terpening.

Most students felt that in the long run the senior interviews were going to be helpful for future experiences in the adult world.

Sara Ballinger

In March, thirty-two business people from the community volunteered their time to conduct mock interviews to help seniors prepare for the future.

Seniors will be faced with many interviews once they graduate, such as for college entrance, work places, and those who want to go into the military. Many college students have part-time jobs, but in order to get those jobs they had to be interviewed.

Michelle Ehrlich
Nathaniel Ellis
Cassandra Enright
Craig Fabus

Matthew Feldpausch
Rebecca Ferguson
Garett Findlay
Stephen Fitzpatrick

84 Seniors