CLINTON COUNTY

Clinton County, as well as many other counties in the lower peninsula was originally part of Wayne County which was laid out in 1796, by Winthrop Sargent, Acting Governor of the old Northwest Territory. Subsequent proclamations by Governor Cass placed it in Oakland and Kalamazoo Counties. In 1836, the entire area of the county was embraced in a single township - DeWitt. On March 12, 1839, the Michigan Legislature officially organized Clinton County. The County was administered by a county board of three officers appointed by the Governor. This practice continued until April, 1827, when the present Board of Supervisors system was effected.

The greater part of the pioneer settlers in Clinton County, were farmers from the State of New York. It is not surprising, therefore, that agriculture, particularly wheat farming, formed the basis of the county's early economy - a situation which holds true even today. Lumbering was also a major employer as saw mills sprung up at various locations throughout the county. Many of these early settlements evolved as present cities and villages.

The population of the county was 529 at the time of its earliest census in 1837. Subsequent census figures indicated spectacular early growth with 3,060 in 1845, 13,923 in 1860, and over 23,000 persons in 1874.

The first settlement in the county was made at the place now known as Maple Rapids by George Campau in 1826. David Scott, who has generally but erroneously been mentioned as the first settler in the county, located on the Looking Glass River in the present township of DeWitt, in 1833. The county seat was originally established in the Village of DeWitt until 1857 when, by a township vote of 233-3, it was removed to St. Johns.

BINGHAM TOWNSHIP

Bingham Township was organized on March 21, 1839. It was originally a part of DeWitt Township and, at the time of its organization, included the territory of Ovid, Duplain, and Greenbush Townships. It was named in honor of Governor K. S. Bingham. The Township was first settled in 1837 by Lucius Morton. The first town meeting was held April 3, 1839.

CITY OF ST. JOHNS

In 1852, the post office of "Bingham" was established by George Estes to serve a fast growing saw mill community. It was moved in 1854, to the newly established settlement of St. Johns named in honor of John Swegles, its first settler. The village was officially platted by Swegles and eleven associates of March 25, 1856, as the "Village of St. Johns." In 1857, the village received an economic boost with the completion of the laying of the track through St. Johns of the Detroit and Milwaukee Railroad. In January of that year, it received its first passenger train. A second impetus to the progress of the village was its establishment in 1857 as the Clinton County seat. Early industries included several saw mills, a grist mill, a furniture company, several foundries, a sash and door company, and a bed spring manufactory. Its most magnificent edifice, the county courthouse, was constructed in 1868 for the cost of $45,000, $5,000 of which was raised by the village itself. In 1905, St. Johns was incorporated as a city and received its home rule charter in 1918.

BATH TOWNSHIP

The territory now comprised within the limits of Bath and Victor Townships, formerly constituted the township of "Ossowa" which was organized in March, 1839. The township was reorganized on March 9, 1843, into two townships, the southern half being "Bath." It was named through the influence of Silas W. Rose, an early settler, for his birthplace of Bath, New York. The township's first settler was Ira Cushman who entered Section 19 in 1836. The village of Bath is situated on land which was originally part of a land grant given by the government to Dustin Marr, a soldier of the Mexican War. By 1864, a saw mill was successfully in operation and the settlement began to experience increased growth. In the late sixties, largely due to the efforts of Charles Tompkins, the newly opened railway constructed a depot within the settlement. The "Village of Bath" was originally laid out in 1875 but was never officially platted or incorporated.

One of the worst catastrophes in the Region's history struck the community of Bath on May 18, 1927, when a disgruntled citizen, Andrew Keyhoe, dynamited the school killing 45 teachers and students and injuring 58. The story made headlines throughout the world and left Bath with terrible memories, the impact of which are felt even today.

BENGAL TOWNSHIP

Bengal Township was organized on March 19, 1840. The first slate of township officers were elected on April 18, 1840, at a meeting which also appropriated $250 for administrative purposes. Its first Supervisor, Cortland Hill, was also its first settler having arrived in 1837. Agriculture was originally, and still is, its primary economic venture. By 1847, its population had increased to 49 persons, with over 1,000 by 1870.

DEWITT TOWNSHIP

DeWitt Township originally included the land comprising the entire area of Clinton County. An act of the State Legislature organized the township on March 23, 1836. It was named for DeWitt Clinton, Governor of New York and builder of the Erie Canal. Several small communities were founded within the present boundaries of the township, but only the village of DeWitt has withstood the ravages of time. The first of these was "Middletown" or

"Middleton." It was situated on the north side of the Looking Glass River east of the present Village of DeWitt. The original survey of the village, completed in 1836, showed a settlement consisting of eighty-six blocks, each containing one and three-fifths acres. Block thirty-six was reserved for the village square. On October 12, 1842, after a dismal beginning, the lots of the village were sold for unpaid taxes. The village of "New Albany" was first platted in 1833 by Hiram Sheldon. It was located on the south side of the Looking Glass River and contained twenty-nine blocks. It, also, failed to achieve desired expectations and was sold for taxes in 1840. Final sale prices of the lots ranged from seventy-four cents per lot to a dollar and six cents per lot. The plat of "Old DeWitt" was originated in 1837 by Frederick Bowles. It was situated east of and adjoining New Albany. The village consisted of seventy-eight blocks each containing eight lots. Old DeWitt also failed to develop and was advertised for unpaid taxes in 1842. Although the lots ranged in price from ninety-five cents to one dollar and twenty-four cents, none were apparently sold.

CITY OF DEWITT

Captain David Scott, his wife and two sons, arrived at the site of the present City of DeWitt on October 4, 1833. Scott built his home on the Looking Glass River and, because of a rapid influx of settlers, he also constructed a hotel to accomodate them. "Scotts Place" was known far and wide in the 30's and 40's as a gathering place and soon attracted permanent settlers. It became the administrative center of the county simply because it was the only settlement of any size when Clinton County was organized in 1839. Although county buildings were never constructed, DeWitt's prestige as the county seat was clearly responsible for its active early development. When the county seat was removed to St. Johns in 1857, it marked an abrupt end to the villages rapid growth patterns. At the time of its greatest development, DeWitt contained a hotel, two general stores, a drug store, two millinery shops, a shoe store, a wagon shop, three blacksmith shops, two saw mills, a flour mill, and two churches. It was officially incorporated as a village in 1928, and became a city of the fifth class in 1965.

DALLAS TOWNSHIP

A legislature act, approved March 19, 1845, detached Dallas Township from Lebanon Township. The naming was left to two men, one who favored the name "Polk" in honor of the newly-elected President, and the other who wanted "Dallas" in honor of the newly-elected Vice-President. The two men drew lots and the township was officially christened Dallas. The first township meeting was held April 23, 1845, where 27 votes were cast for township officers. In 1857, one hundred and sixty acres of land was purchased for the purpose of founding a village. Its name was to be "Dallas" and its purpose was to furnish the location for a depot on the newly constructed Detroit-Milwaukee Railroad. A hotel was erected, as was a general store, and several lots were bought. Despite valient efforts, the village was a dismal failure from the start. The surrounding country was so swampy that travel to and from the village was an impossibility. After ten years of existence, village inhabitants began looking for a new location. With the aid of F. N. Fowler, of Detroit, as well as the railroad, the entire village was moved three-quarters of a mile west to the present site of Fowler. F. N. Fowler platted his village in 1867 and named it Isabella, after the County of Isabella where he had large landed interests. The name was quite unpopular and, at the request of the villagers themselves, Fowler renamed it after himself in 1869. The plat of the "Village of Fowler" was filed February 1, 1870. By 1880, the village had a population of 350 persons and consisted of two hotels, two general stores, two hardware stores, a boot store, two groceries, two drug stores, and a furniture store.

DUPLAIN TOWNSHIP

Duplain Township was organized on March 19, 1840, and originally called "Sena". The name was one of three submitted with the organization petition, the other two being "Sinai" and "Napanee." On March 20, 1841, the name of "Duplain" was officially recognized. It was named for the French word DuPlain meaning "of the plain." The first township meeting was held April 23, 1840. In 1845, the Craven brothers settled on the Maple River and established a saw mill. A village was platted, although never recorded, and several stores were erected. The settlement was unofficially called "Craven's Mills" or "Corners." It was abandoned in 1857 in favor of the Village of Elsie. A Second settlement, called "Rochester Colony" was founded on February 29, 1836. An association was formed in Rochester, New York, which sold shares in the Michigan colony for $125 each. Each shareholder was entitled to one vote, eighty acres of farm land, and one village lot. The first settlers of the colony set out for Michigan in July of 1836. It consisted of sixteen persons, ten of which were children. The colony gave its collection of village lots the name of "Mapleton" and by 1852, it had grown to a size large enough to support four physicians. The entire colony consisted of more than four-thousand acres. The Village of Elsie was platted June 18, 1857. Its eary population consisted of former residents of Craven's Mills and was named for the daughter of Franklin Tillotson, the settlement's first postmaster. By 1880, the village contained three general stores, a hardware store, a grocery, a drug store, two shoe stores...two taverns, and a cheese factory. It was incorporated as a village in 1885.
